Designing Healthy COMMUNITIES

How the Built Environment Impacts Obesity:
"What Role
Do You
Play?"

Friday
September 16, 2005
8:30 am – 4:00 pm
Kilcawley Center
Youngstown State University
Youngstown, Ohio

Cosponsored by:
Eastern Ohio Area Health Education Center,
Healthy Valley Alliance, Youngstown State University

ABOUT THE Program

This program will explore elements of community design as they relate to the health of individuals where they live, work and play.

The presentations will define the connection of physical inactivity and obesity to the built environment, and the importance of planning for active living.

Target AUDIENCE

Professionals in business, labor, health care, education, urban planning, housing and transportation.

PROGRAM Objectives

- Identify the effects of obesity on public health.
- Examine the relationship of physical inactivity to obesity.
- Understand the key strategies and tactics of the Active Living by Design national program.
- Identify challenges and opportunities in research, practice and policy efforts to promote physical activity through the built environment.
- Explore the intersecting dynamics of self-development, well-being and performance across the life span.
- Discuss how individual and social choices affect health behaviors.
- Identify at least one environment or area where opportunities for physical activity can be increased through design.
